Using the List

The Super Doctors list is a great starting point. But to find the best doctor for you, it's important to ask the doctor you're considering visiting—and yourself—a few key questions.

SUBSTANCE Is this doctor on your health plan? Does he or she have an office in a convenient location, and would he or she have privileges at a conveniently located hospital? Where is lab work done? Who covers when your doctor is away? Do you want someone with board certification in a particular specialty? Does the doctor—especially if you're facing surgery—have a lot of experience with your condition?

STYLE Will the doctor you're considering have an approach that's right for you? Different doctors have different communication styles. Only you can decide if a doctor's style works for you. But when it does, you'll tend to do what your doctor recommends, and be healthier for it. And it's important to answer this question on one or more routine office visits, when you're generally healthy. That way, you'll already have the right doctor if you develop a serious problem.

This information was adapted from advice offered on the Web sites of the National Institutes of Health and the U.S. Department of Health & Human Services' Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality.

This listing does not necessarily indicate that a doctor is a certified specialist in the designated field. Names and page numbers in RED BOLDFACE indicate a profile on the specified page. ♦ indicates a doctor's practice has a pediatric specialty.
